

“The Green Symphony”

By Candy Kuo

This mural for Pflugerville celebrates the harmony between culture, nature, and expression. At its center, a musician plays guitar, rooted in a field of native Texas flowers, his presence both grounded and expansive. His music becomes a part of the landscape itself, a moment where song and nature move as one. Surrounding him, a Monarch and other Texas butterflies drift and dance like living notes, symbolizing transformation, and the quiet power of migration, shared journeys, and resilience.

The piece is a reflection on how creativity and environment intertwine. Just as the butterflies return and the flowers bloom season after season, the mural honors the enduring presence and influence of Texas artistry and the way it shapes the rhythm and soul of a place. Art is the universal language; it transcends boundaries and connects land, history, and identity. In a place defined by growth and change, it offers a sense of continuity, beauty, and belonging for an ever-evolving community, one built of diverse voices, stories, and creative spirit.

This mural honors the richness of cultural expression rooted in the Texas landscape as a celebration of movement, of music, of our world, and its people. It is a visual metaphor for growth and how culture takes root, adapts, and flourishes over time. It is a tribute to the energy of creation and the power of presence. I hope it invites viewers to pause, feel, and recognize the beauty in both individuality and connection, and to consider how we each shape, and are shaped by, the environments we inhabit.
